EACH AND EVERY STUDENT: DEVELOPING SYSTEMS OF SUPPORT FOR LEARNERS WITH ADHD

Move beyond technical interventions to build inclusive systems that recognize ADHD as a unique way of being in the world — one that can become either an advantage or a challenge depending on how educators prepare and respond.

Come experience the latest research with Universal Design for Learning principles to transform how schools support students with ADHD.

Participants will explore:

- Understanding ADHD as not just a disorder, but as a complex challenge of executive functioning
- Recognizing the relationship between academics and behavior, for example the influence of executive functioning on reading development
- Applying UDL as the foundation for designing learning environments, instruction, and systems of support for students with ADHD and for all students

Take home practical strategies that can be implemented the next day, along with processes that support educators to continuously improve their learning experience.

Intended Audience:

General and special education teachers, instructional coaches, specialists, and administrators committed to inclusive, responsive learning environments

Matt Renwick

Matt Renwick – Credentialed Coach, Lifelong Educator, Dad, Husband.

Matt has served in public education for over 20 years, starting as a 5th and 6th-grade teacher in a country school outside of Wisconsin Rapids, WI.

After seven years of teaching, Matt served as an assistant principal, athletic director, and elementary principal for sixteen years.

Matt has written for ASCD, Choice Literacy, and Corwin. He also taught future administrators in graduate courses on curriculum and instructional leadership for the University of Wisconsin-Superior.

He is now a systems coach for a regional education agency, supporting school and district leaders in achieving more equitable outcomes for their students.
